Our regular viewers may remember, our stories on Ruth Sharkey, the herbalist dubbed the baby maker.

While she's now retired, another person is fast making a name for himself as a baby maker.

Andrew Orr practices Chinese medicine, and through acupuncture and herbs, he's also helped many many couples conceive.

"The joy you see on couples faces is just priceless," he says.

One mum who now has a miracle baby thanks to Andrew is Melinda Trembath.

"We were trying for about six months and in traditional medicine they want you to wait for about twelve months until they investigate any problems. And I just thought we wanted to get on the road quicker," she says.

Having trouble conceiving naturally, the baby-maker helped them conceive, with a mixture of massage, acupuncture and herb potions brewed into a tea.

"In its simplest terms acupuncture, chinese medicine is just a series of unblocking blockages via pathway. Very simplistic but it works very well," Andrew says.
